The transition to Stage Orange and the plan to resume activities on campus

Dr. Fukuda, executive director and chair of the U-Tokyo coronavirus task force has announced the lowering of the university-wide status from level 2 to level 1, effective Monday, June 15. In light of this, the current stage of the Komaba campus will be changed from Stage Red A to Stage Orange.

I announced the rules and regulations for Stage Orange on May 29. Here, I would like to announce once again how activities shall be carried out on the Komaba Campus during this stage.

1 Students in the Junior Division are allowed to take online classes on campus (limited to students who have difficulty taking classes online at home). Please note that a reservation is required to take the classes on campus.

2 Students in the Senior Division, graduate students, and research students may enter the campus for their research activities and attend small-group seminars. These students may also take online classes on campus. Please limit the time you spend on campus to 30% or less of the time that you would spend on campus during normal times. A reservation is required to enter the campus, use the classrooms, and enter the library.

3 Faculty members and researchers may host online lectures from the campus. You may also host small-group seminars on campus for students in the senior division and graduate students. Please keep the time you spend on campus to 30% or less of the time that you would spend on campus during normal times.

4 When you conduct research activities, please keep the time you spend on campus to 30% or less of the time that you would spend on campus during normal times.

5 We encourage you to conduct all of your meetings online whenever possible. Meetings may be held in person only if there are no more than ten attendees.

6 The administrative office shall have a maximum of 60% of staff members commute to the campus. Some delays and post-processing are expected, and staggered office hours and working from home are encouraged.

Once again, we ask for your understanding and cooperation in the above policy.
