

Meeting the challenge of internationalisation: from teaching innovation to enhancing the student experience

Abstract

A cursory glance at the mission statements, visions and webpages of universities across the world shows that internationalisation is an increasingly important and shared objective. However, the promotion of a successful internationalization strategy presents various challenges for all members of the university from academic to support staff, home to international students, and across a range of activities including shaping the curriculum and enhancing the student experience.

In this talk, Professor Hugo Dobson of the University of Sheffield will reflect on his own experiences in meeting these challenges and suggest possible responses in promoting long-lasting change.

When : 6.00 pm, June 29th, 2012
Where : Collaboration Room 3, Building 18, Komaba I campus
Registration : Open to all, no registration necessary

Hugo Dobson is Professor of Japan's International Relations in the School of East Asian Studies and the National Institute of Japanese Studies at the University of Sheffield, UK.

His teaching and research interests are in Japan's foreign policy, the role of the G8 and G20 in global governance and the role of informal actors and images in international relations.

He is the author of Japan and the G7/8, 1975–2002 (2004) and The Group of 7/8 (2007), and he is co-author of Japan's International Relations: Politics, Economics and Security, 3rd ed. (2011).